(1) Youssef Azzouzi was born on December 28th in 1991 in Ksar El kébir, Morocco. His father is professor Mustapha Azzouzi who was, too, among the most creative minds all over the world for brain and nerves surgeries in Morocco. He is a permanent member in the American Congress for brain and spine surgeries. In 1997, he invented a medical tool by which doctors can treat brain diseases.

(2) Thanks to Youssef's perseverance and hard work, he could join and graduate from the American School in Rabat, and then he moved to Oxford, a prestigious university which is known world-wide, for three years. Later, he joined Boston University in the United States and finally settled in a Turkish university for medical studies in English.

(3) The 28-year-old Moroccan inventor was a candidate in a Qatar TV programme called Stars of Science. It is dedicated to the Arab youth all around the world aged between 18 and 35 and who are highly ambitious and super interested in boosting science and technology to save human lives and have a positive impact not only on the humankind but also on the environment at large.

(4) Heart disease treatment is a long-term process that requires more patience and more money. It is costly because it demands a heart pump, which is used now by doctors to save sick people's lives. Here comes the idea of creating a Moderator Heart Stent by which such people can live a normal life with less medical expenses and doctor regular visits. Indeed, the young doctor presented his project work before the jury and, fortunately, his was selected among 5600 other ones submitted from all over the world.

(5) Youssef could reach the final competition stage along with a Jordanian candidate and a Qatari one but it was later officially declared that Youssef Azzouzi was the winner as the best inventor all over the Arab World. "I can't tell you how jubilant I am now. Thank you all for supporting me throughout this competition journey. Thank you the jury who believed in my project and my ideas. Thank you, mum, for being my first investor and thank God for everything," Youssef said joyfully. His parents added, "We are proud of our son because he would not only contribute to humanity's sustainable development but also to medication progress because he could combine between science, technology and human remedy."
