

(1) Sure, it is fun to share a good laugh. But did you know it can actually improve your health? It is true laughter is a strong medicine. It draws people together in ways that trigger healthy, physical and emotional changes in the body. Laughter not only strengthens your immune system, boosts mood, diminishes pain, but protects you from the damaging effects of stress as well. As children, we used to laugh hundreds of times a day, but as adults life tends to be more serious and laughter more infrequent. By seeking out more opportunities for humour and laughter, you can improve your emotional health, strengthen your relationships, find greater happiness—and even add years to your life.

(2) Laughter is a powerful antidote to stress, pain, and conflict. Nothing works faster or more dependably to bring your mind and body back into balance than a good laugh. Humour lightens your burdens, inspires hopes, connects you to others, and keeps you grounded and alert. It also helps to release anger and be more forgiving. With so much power to heal and renew, the ability to laugh easily and frequently is a tremendous resource for surmounting problems, enhancing your relationships, and supporting both physical and emotional health. Best of all, this priceless medicine is fun, free and easy to use.

(3) Laughter is your birth right, a natural part of life that is innate. Infants begin smiling during the first weeks of life and laugh out loud within months of being born. Though you did not grow up in a household where laughter was frequently used, you can learn to laugh at any stage of life. Begin by setting aside special times to seek out humour and laughter, as you might with working out for instance, and then you can build from there. Eventually, you will want to incorporate humour and laughter into the fabric of your life, finding it naturally in everything you do.

(4) An essential ingredient for developing your sense of humour is to learn not to take yourself too seriously and laugh at your own mistakes and foibles. It goes without saying that we all do foolish things from time to time. Instead of feeling embarrassed or defensive, embrace your imperfections. While some events in life are clearly sad and since the opportunities for laughter are rare, most people tend to carry an overwhelming sense of either sadness or delight. They fall into the gray zone of ordinary life—giving themselves the choice to laugh or not. So, you'd better choose to laugh whenever you can.

(5) Indeed, the ability to laugh, play and have fun with others not only makes life more enjoyable but also helps you solve problems, connect with others, and be more creative. People who incorporate humour and play into their daily lives find that it renews them and all of their relationships. Life brings challenges that can either get the best of you or become playthings for your imagination. When “you become the problem” and take yourself too seriously, it can be hard to think outside the box and find new solutions. On the contrary, when you play with the problem, you can often transform it into an opportunity for creative learning. Playing with problems seems to come naturally to children. When they are confused or afraid, they deal with their problems playfully. That will undoubtedly give them a sense of control and an opportunity to experiment with new solutions. Interacting with others in playful ways helps you retain this creative ability.

(6) After all, as laughter and play become an integrated part of your life, your creativity will flourish and new opportunities for laughing with friends, coworkers, acquaintances, and loved ones will occur to you daily. Laughter takes you to a higher place where you can view the world from a more relaxed positive, and joyful perspective.
